MM, 1951

"I thought I could never buy a home alone, but I've done it. It's like being married and not having a husband."

MM, 1962

"I could never imagine buying a home alone. But, I've always been alone, so why couldn't I imagine it?"

MM, 1962

Her Life from A to Z

469

1962, between 9:00 and 10:00 A.M. at her Brentwood home.

Nonetheless, over the next two decades, Marilyn Monroe would remain an integral part of Lawrence Schiller's life. In the early 1970s, Schiller produced an exhibition of MM photographs entitled "Marilyn Monroe: The Legend and The Truth." The exhibition, which toured the country, was so successful that a book was planned. The photo book evolved into Norman Mailer's Marilyn: A Biography (Grosset and Dunlap, 1973). The book was produced and designed by Lawrence Schiller.

Then, in 1980, Schiller produced the fine telefilm Marilyn: The Untold Story for ABC. It was based, predictably, on the Norman Mailer book.

Today, several years later, it is not yet certain whether or not Lawrence Schiller has gotten Marilyn Monroe out of his system. Surely, his life would have been different without her. Regardless, Schiller has gone on to produce such television projects as The Executioner's Song (1981), which was based, of course, on Norman Mailer's award-winning book.

GEORGE SCHLEE

In 1955, Aristotle Onassis reportedly approached George Schlee with the proposition that Marilyn Monroe marry Prince Rainier of Monaco. Schlee, in turn, contacted Gardner Cowles, who discussed the possibility with MM.

CHARLES SCHNEE

Charles Schnee wrote the screenplay for the 1950 film Right Cross, which featured Marilyn Monroe in a small part. Among Schnee's other credits are I Walk Alone (1947), The Bad and the Beautiful (for which he won a 1952 Oscar), and Butterfield 8 (1960).
